You will hear a woman inquiring about a job vacancy.

First, you have some time to look at questions one to four.

Now we shall begin.

You should answer the questions as you listen, because you will not hear the recording a second time.

Listen carefully and answer questions one to four.

Speaker A: Hi there. Welcome to the Job Centre. How can I help?

Speaker B: Good morning. I'm here to inquire as to whether you have any jobs available at the moment.

Speaker A: Yes, we have several available.

Speaker A: What kind of job is it that you're looking for?

Speaker B: Well, I'll take any part-time jobs I can get.

Speaker B: I'm really strapped for cash at the moment.

Speaker A: OK. Bear with me while I have a browse on our system.

Speaker A: Here we are.

Speaker A: We have three vacancies at the moment, all involving quite different roles.

Speaker B: That sounds promising. What are they?

Speaker A: The first one is for a post as a receptionist.

Speaker A: It says here that experience in reception or general administration is preferred, but not essential.

Speaker A: Have you worked on a reception desk previously?

Speaker B: No, I haven't. I had a baby quite young, and so I have very little work experience.

Speaker B: Could you tell me a few more details?

Speaker A: Yes, of course.

Speaker A: The job will be to mainly provide quality customer service, both over the phone and in person.

Speaker A: When customers are waiting, you will be expected to provide them with refreshments and ensure they have a first-rate experience.

Speaker B: I think I could manage that, and I'm a very friendly person.

Speaker A: That's great.

Speaker B: Do you have any information about the hours involved?

Speaker A: It says here that you will be expected to work several early mornings, four days a week.

Speaker B: Any other requirements?

Speaker A: Yeah. You'll have to go through a couple of weeks of unpaid training before qualifying for the post.

Speaker B: I don't know if I would be able to fully commit to that.

Speaker B: Did you say it's four days per week?

Speaker A: Yeah. It says here four days a week, with another day off per week when requested in advance.

Speaker A: It also explicitly states that at least one of your working days must fall on a weekend.

Speaker B: I'll have to think about that and talk to my babysitter.

Before you hear the rest of the conversation, you have some time to look at questions 5 to 10.

Now listen and answer questions 5 to 10.

Speaker B: Are there any other roles beginning later in the day?

Speaker A: Yes. There's an advertisement here for a driver.

Speaker A: It says you'll need a clean and valid UK driver's licence, with absolutely no exception.

Speaker B: No problems there. I pass my test first time and have never received any points.

Speaker A: It also explicitly states that you must be over 25 and have been driving for at least 6 years.

Speaker B: That sounds quite exciting. Is there any more information?

Speaker A: Yep. It says here that working hours are flexible and the employers are happy to work within your personal schedule, since they employ multiple drivers.

Speaker B: That's great.

Speaker A: The employers ask for a commitment to either mornings, 5 days per week, evenings, 5 days per week, or three full working days per week.

Speaker B: I'm sure I can handle all that without a problem.

Speaker A: As well as driving the employers to and from work, they will ask you to perform various duties on their behalf, such as collecting the grocery shopping and picking their children up from school.

Speaker B: Do they need me to work a day on the weekend as well?

Speaker A: No. It says here that they only require you to work on weekdays, not weekends.

Speaker B: That sounds interesting.

Speaker A: OK. There's only one more left, another customer service related post.

Speaker A: It looks like it requires you to work short hours, quite late at night, so it might not be suitable for you.

Speaker A: Do you want to hear about it anyway?

Speaker B: Yeah, can't do any harm.

Speaker A: OK. So it's a post for a cashier in a cinema in the centre of town.

Speaker A: I'm sure you've been to the cinema a few times, so you can guess what kind of role it would be.

Speaker A: They're quite short and late shifts, between 5.30 and 10.30 most nights, with slightly longer shifts on Friday and Saturday nights.

Speaker B: Can you tell me what the job involves?

Speaker A: Yes, sure. It says that you'll be required to sell and dispense tickets and provide refreshments.

Speaker A: Also, they ask that you be quick on the computers, since you'll also need to take bookings over the phone, but you'll receive basic training for that.

Speaker B: Do they need me to work weekdays as well?

Speaker A: Well, it says here that if you request at least a fortnight in advance, they will grant you a day off on Mondays, but never on a weekend.

Speaker B: Hmm. I'll think it over and let you know later. Thanks for all your help.

Speaker A: That is the end of section 1. You now have half a minute to check your answers.

----	----------	--	--

You will hear the chairperson of the Middletown Urban Farming Scheme talking to a group of people who are interested in joining the scheme.

First, you have some time to look at questions 11 to 16 on page 3.

Now listen carefully and answer questions 11 to 16.

I'm Chris Butler and I'm the chairperson of the Middletown Urban Farming Scheme or MUFS for short, a highly successful program which encourages city dwellers to grow their own fruit and vegetables, to become city farmers, if you will.

Who started MUFS? Well, the idea of urban farming has been around for quite a while, particularly among town planners, but it was actually a group of Middletown business people, including myself, who decided to create what became MUFS.

University agriculture specialists got involved later.

Now, initially, the aim was not some eco-friendly goal of reducing CO₂ emissions caused by the transport of food from farm to dinner plate.

It was simply to maximize the utilization of the vacant or idle land that lies within the city.

Of course, later we realized that an additional benefit might be a healthier diet for local people.

Let me tell you a bit about the groups that have joined the scheme.

We've got any number of schools involved and loads of corporate employees, so our message seems to have been well received there.

But for next year, we're going to concentrate on getting various community centers, like those for senior citizens to join, because so far they've been somewhat slow to take up the scheme.

Now, the core committee of the MUFS is a group of dedicated gardeners.

They probably won't be familiar with your specific plot of land.

They're mostly amateurs, but they are the people who know the ins and outs of gardening, and they will be happy to sit down with any MUFS member and make some hands-on suggestions about gardening.

But don't expect them to know the answers to technical questions, like the Latin names of plants.

The MUFS are keen to support members who are physically disabled.

We're looking at the possibility of providing specially adapted gardening tools on loan to members who can't cope with regular tools.

That's not happening yet.

But we do have some window boxes as well as larger containers, which we can distribute free of charge to these members, although they will have to provide their own soil and compost themselves.

I'm especially proud of the work we've done with the local schools, both grade school level and high schools.

The teachers say that they knew the scheme would be of some practical use in science classes like biology.

Despite the original hopes of some, the fruit and vegetable plots haven't provided cheaper lunches for their students.

But what they didn't anticipate was the change in attitude that the scheme has created amongst their students.

They say the students have become much more conscious of their surrounding environment.

They want to keep it neat and tidy.

Before you hear the rest of the talk, you have some time to look at questions 17 to 20 on page 4.

Now listen and answer questions 17 to 20.

Now a number of local organisations and businesses provide our members with free goods and services.

Let me go through some of them.

The city hospital, as you might expect, has to provide thousands of meals for its patients.

So the manager of its kitchen runs a course for our members on how to use vegetables in a huge variety of dishes.

The local government found it had a large glass building, which the parks department used, to start off flower seeds in young plants during the winter.

And they agreed to allow our members to use this free of charge to get their own little seedlings off to a good start.

Another thing, the university has agreed that if members send them a sample of their soil, they will do a series of tests on it to indicate what kind of plants will grow best and what types of fertilizer and nutrients would be best to use.

And just to make sure our members know what's good for them, a supermarket is offering a series of classes on how to lose weight and stay healthy by having a sensible diet.

Now let's talk about the practicalities.

That is the end of section 2. You now have half a minute to check your answers.

Now turn to section 3 on page 5.

Part 3

Question	Answer	Location	Explain
21	C	We liked the theory behind pest analysis. That's political, economic, social and technological, although we're not sure if it was very applicable to our case. Speaker B: Some of the other groups had studies for which it worked really well and they said it was easy to use, but I felt it focused too much on the big picture and was unsuitable for our company.	- Đáp án là C - Script: "unsuitable for our company" = does not fit our company. - Đây là paraphrase trực tiếp. - Key word: + unsuitable (adj): không phù hợp + applicable (adj): áp dụng được
22	D	Speaker C: I agree. On the other hand, I enjoyed using the drill-down method. Speaker C: It was painstaking to do and we seemed to be working on it for ages, but the results were worth waiting for.	- Đáp án là D - "working on it for ages" → mất nhiều thời gian → take too long. - Key word: + painstaking (adj): tốn công sức + for ages (phr): rất lâu

23	E	Speaker C: Yes, I much preferred doing the PMI analysis. Speaker C: It was so straightforward to break down into its three components, plus, minus and interesting implications.	- Đáp án là E - “straightforward” = easy to use. - PMI dễ thực hiện, không phức tạp. - Key word: + straightforward (adj): đơn giản + components (n): thành phần
24	A	Speaker B: If they applied Pareto analysis, they would see that by focusing on the critical 20% of their problems, they could generate 80% of the benefits. Speaker B: This would allow them to work faster and it also reduces their workload.	- Đáp án là A - “work faster” + “reduces workload” → tiết kiệm thời gian và công sức. - Key word: + workload (n): khối lượng công việc + generate (v): tạo ra
25	G	Speaker C: I agree with Frances about Pareto, but my favourite was the SWOT analysis. Speaker C: You know, looking at the company's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats, as it can be used in so many different situations.	- Đáp án là G - “used in so many different situations” → phù hợp với nhiều loại công ty. - Key word: + situations (n): tình huống + SWOT (n): mô hình phân tích
26	A	Speaker B: We initially looked at their strengths. Speaker B: The company, although it is small, is well known and has a very good reputation.	- Đáp án là A - Frances nhấn mạnh “very good reputation” là điểm mạnh. - B và C chỉ được nhắc sau, không phải “best strength”. - Key word: + reputation (n): danh tiếng + well known (adj): nổi tiếng

Speaker A: You didn't consider the potential for establishing an offshore division.	- Đáp án là B - “establishing an offshore division” = set up an overseas office. - A sai vì đã được đề cập (negotiating suppliers). - C không được nhắc. - Key word: + offshore (adj): ở nước ngoài + division (n): bộ phận

28	C	Speaker A: I was really pleased to see that you considered how the government's planned environmental policy could really affect the viability of this venture. Speaker A: With this law being introduced next year, they might need to find new ways of using their existing technology.	- Đáp án là C - “government... policy... law being introduced” → new legislation. - Key word: + policy (n): chính sách + law (n): luật
29	C	Speaker C: Heaps. I guess I hadn't realised how much time it takes to ensure your company survives and profits. Speaker C: It was great to study the different tools in books, but applying them in the real world was much harder than I thought.	- Đáp án là C - “study in books” vs “real world harder” → gap between theory and reality. - Key word: + real world (n): thực tế + apply (v): áp dụng
30	A	Speaker A: Just remember to state whether or not you think the company should go ahead with the new venture. Speaker A: But you've done a good job so far.	- Đáp án là A - “state whether... should go ahead” → đưa ra kết luận cuối cùng. - B và C sai vì giáo viên nói đã đủ cấu trúc và chi tiết. - Key word: + state (v): nêu rõ + go ahead (v): tiến hành

First, you have some time to look at questions 21 to 25.

Now listen carefully and answer questions 21 to 25.

Speaker A: Hi Frances, Sam. So, how did you go with applying the different theoretical business tools for the report I asked you to write?

Speaker B: It was interesting and made us really focus on which tool was best to use when analysing a business.

Speaker A: Good. So, tell me what you found out.

Speaker B: We liked the theory behind pest analysis. That's political, economic, social and technological, although we're not sure if it was very applicable to our case.

Speaker B: Some of the other groups had studies for which it worked really well and they said it was easy to use, but I felt it focused too much on the big picture and was unsuitable for our company.

Speaker C: I agree. On the other hand, I enjoyed using the drill-down method.

Speaker C: It was painstaking to do and we seemed to be working on it for ages, but the results were worth waiting for.

Speaker B: Yes, I liked the way it eventually broke down complex problems.

Speaker C: Yes, I much preferred doing the PMI analysis.

Speaker C: It was so straightforward to break down into its three components, plus, minus and interesting implications.

Speaker C: You just needed to brainstorm these components and then write them up.

Speaker C: Fast and effective. And it didn't make your brain hurt doing it.

Speaker B: I agree. And you don't need any special training at all. Anyone can use it.

Speaker A: Hmm. So, was there any tool that you thought was superior to the others?

Speaker B: In my opinion, the one tool that is critical to business, especially for larger companies, is Pareto analysis.

Speaker B: If they applied Pareto analysis, they would see that by focusing on the critical 20% of their problems, they could generate 80% of the benefits.

Speaker B: This would allow them to work faster and it also reduces their workload.

Speaker B: It's all about finding out what their basic problems are.

Speaker C: I agree with Frances about Pareto, but my favourite was the SWOT analysis.

Speaker C: You know, looking at the company's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats, as it can be used in so many different situations.

Speaker C: It works in large and small companies and even down to departmental level.

Speaker C: It was great for our case study.

Speaker B: Yes, that's true.

Before you hear the rest of the discussion, you have some time to look at questions 26 to 30 on page 6.

Now listen and answer questions 26 to 30.

Speaker A: OK. I've read your draft report, but can you tell me a bit more about that company you focused on?

Speaker B: Well, the company we used in our study was a manufacturing company who have relied on distributors to take their product to the end user.

Speaker B: We did some analysis examining the possibility of them distributing their own products.

Speaker B: We initially looked at their strengths.

Speaker B: The company, although it is small, is well known and has a very good reputation.

Speaker B: The management are very committed to increasing the company profits and they are confident this move would be successful.

Speaker C: Right. And the company has quite a lot of staff who have previously worked for distribution companies, so the knowledge is already there.

Speaker C: That was something we didn't expect to find and is probably going to help them the most to achieve their goals.

Speaker A: I was quite impressed by some of the opportunities you detailed.

Speaker A: I did think you missed something quite pertinent to their future growth, however.

Speaker B: What was that?

Speaker A: You didn't consider the potential for establishing an offshore division.

Speaker A: You talked about the company negotiating better terms with its suppliers.

Speaker A: Most of these are based abroad and so if the company had a way of actually distributing the product there, this could be a tremendous opportunity and give them an edge over their competitors.

Speaker B: That's a good point.

Speaker B: So what did you think about the threats we identified?

Speaker A: I thought you did a good job.

Speaker A: I was really pleased to see that you considered how the government's planned environmental policy could really affect the viability of this venture.

Speaker A: With this law being introduced next year, they might need to find new ways of using their existing technology.

Speaker A: It's easy to identify what your competitors are doing, but it's the bigger picture that often gets ignored.

Speaker A: So, Sam, what did you learn from this assignment?

Speaker C: Heaps. I guess I hadn't realised how much time it takes to ensure your company survives and profits.

Speaker C: It was great to study the different tools in books, but applying them in the real world was much harder than I thought.

Speaker C: It was a great learning experience.

Speaker A: I'm glad I could make your assignment relevant.

Speaker A: I'm basically happy with your report.

Speaker A: You've got the format correct with the necessary headings, etc.

Speaker A: And you've got sufficient details under the different headings.

Speaker A: Just remember to state whether or not you think the company should go ahead with the new venture.

Speaker A: But you've done a good job so far.

That is the end of Section 3.

You now have half a minute to check your answers.

Now turn to Section 4.

----	-----------------	--	--

Today, we will discuss the adwaita turtle, a species that has drawn significant attention due to its unique characteristics and conservation challenges.

These turtles are typically found in streams of freshwater, where they thrive in slow-moving water. Their preferred environment consists of shallow areas with abundant vegetation, offering both food and shelter.

Unlike some other turtles, they are not well adapted to deep or fast-moving rivers.

One of the most distinguishing features of the adwaita turtle is its shell.

Unlike species with tough, protective outer layers, this turtle's shell is unusually fragile.

This makes it highly vulnerable to predators and environmental damage.

As a result, they tend to stay hidden for long periods, avoiding direct threats whenever possible.

Another key characteristic is their strong claws, which serve multiple purposes.

These turtles use their claws for digging burrows in soft riverbeds, allowing them to rest safely out of sight.

Additionally, their claws help them in foraging, as they scrape through mud and vegetation to uncover food sources.

Speaking of diet, adwaita turtles are omnivorous, meaning they consume both plant and animal matter.

While they often feed on insects and aquatic plants, they are also known to eat mushrooms that grow near the water's edge.

These fungi provide essential nutrients that contribute to their growth and overall health.

Despite their adaptability, adwaita turtles face significant risks.

Their population is currently under a critical threat due to several environmental challenges.

Deforestation and water pollution have destroyed many of their natural habitats, making it increasingly difficult for them to find safe nesting areas.

One of the greatest dangers they face comes from domestic dogs.

These animals often disturb nesting sites, preying on young turtles before they have a chance to develop properly.

Conservation efforts have attempted to reduce these attacks by setting up protective barriers around known nesting areas.

Another issue impacting their survival is climate change.

Rising temperatures and deforestation have led to a loss of moisture in many of their traditional habitats.

As a result, some areas that once supported these turtles have now become dry, forcing them to migrate in search of better conditions.

Unfortunately, many turtles do not survive these long journeys.

To combat these challenges, conservationists have implemented species relocation programmes. These initiatives involve moving turtles from high-risk zones to safer, protected areas where they can thrive without external threats.

In some cases, relocating turtles has required creative solutions.

Due to the difficult terrain in certain regions, researchers have used an elephant to help transport turtles across long distances.

This has proven to be an effective method for ensuring their safe relocation.

Finally, community involvement plays a crucial role in conservation efforts.

Local populations are now receiving specialised training on how to protect Adwaita turtles and their habitats.

By educating people on the importance of these turtles, conservationists hope to create long-term solutions that will secure their future.
